

FRENCH TRADE

How Exporters are Affected by the American Tariff.

England and Germany Have More Cause for Complaint Than France.

THE DUKE DE MORYN ESSAYS A SERIOUS ROLE.

He Will Publish the Memoirs of His Father and no Longer Uses Flashy Coats and Ruffles—Impressive Services at the Funeral of Ambassador Lytton—Distinguished People Present—American Artists' Club.

PARIS, Nov. 28.—The effect of the McKinley tariff on industries throughout France is shown by the following: In an interview, Whitelaw Reid, United States Minister, says: "When you come to analyze it carefully, you will find that most of the outcry in France against the McKinley tariff should really be directed against the administrative bill. Many of the most important French industries have not been affected in the slightest degree by our new tariff. On many classes of silk goods, for example, the advances are inappreciable, and on some of them on which the heaviest advances were made imports have actually increased. There is no advance at all on wines, excepting a beggarly dollar a dozen on champagne. Some of the most important decreases in exportation are on articles on which the McKinley bill made no change in duty. The cause of such decrease must then, of course, be looked for elsewhere. The administrative bill, however, has compelled in many cases much higher valuation than hitherto prevailed, and this for a time has doubtless deranged the operations of some exporters; while the new formalities and more rigid enforcement of the legal requirements at the consulates have at first provoked a great deal of discontent and complaint."

Mr. Reid then quotes M. Ribet, French Minister of Foreign Affairs, and M. Jules Roche, Minister of Commerce, as saying that England and Germany have been much more affected by the tariff than France.

In conclusion Mr. Reid says: "It is true that the duties on most of the important exports from France have not been sufficiently advanced to destroy the trade, although the exportation of such articles as the United States can manufacture are certainly somewhat checked. There are no such advances, however, in the McKinley bill as in the French tariff voted last summer by the Chambers and now in process of being increased by the Senate. The tariff shows repeatedly on articles of prime necessity, an advance of 200 or 300 per cent over existing duties."

From interviews with many Paris exporters it was learned that works of art and high grade textiles have been little affected. In lower grades of textile goods, however, there has been a marked falling off. In buttons and trimmings, too, the best grades have not suffered, while cheap pearl buttons, for instance, have been paralyzed.

The trade in straw and other hats has been greatly reduced, and exports of military necessaries have been down 40 per cent.

Upholstery goods, the standard mixtures of wool, have fallen off greatly.

One exporter says the tariff has caused the most deplorable results in the muslin industries of France. Exports of standard fabrics of low prices have been greatly interrupted.

The exports of artistic pottery and stained windows have been almost prohibited.

THE DUKE DE MORYN HAS DISCARDED HIS ELEGANT COSTUME.

PARIS, Nov. 28.—The young Duke De Moryn has become very serious. He no longer dresses as a ballet dancer, for it will be remembered that a few years ago the Duke was fond of trifling in the clubs, by the Royalists, by imitating the Maure and Sanguelli, prime ballerines of the Grand Opera. He no longer tries to impose eccentric fashions as when he wore blue coats and green trousers, lace cuffs, and a feathered hat. He has been a very happy one, and the Duchess De Moryn, who is a daughter of Gen. Guzman Blanco of Venezuela, has made a very favorable impression in Parisian society. As the Duke De Moryn, Duke of Morny, is more or less rather limited, they do not entertain much, and their greatest extravagance seems to be his.

The Duke De Moryn would like to play a political role and twice was a candidate for deputy, but it was thought that he had not yet proven himself sufficiently serious for so responsible a position. Therefore, the attorney general, Duke of Morny, and the officials of the French Government, who are somewhat advanced, are not in spirit of charity, but because they believe that the club should be a national American institution, supported by Americans who love art.

reets and have candles for light. That is what Mr. A. A. Anderson says. He has lived there long enough to know. Just now Mr. Anderson is in Paris to represent the American students in Paris, of which he is the chief founder. For ever so many years many people saw the necessity for the club, but no one seemed ready to take the initiative. It was only on the spring of last year that the American Artists' and Students' Association was organized.

One day when he was out walking he discovered a curious pile of buildings which he supposed of a club. He issued a call for students of the Latin quarter. About fifty came together and a club was formed. Minister Whitelaw Reid opened the club-house. There were many distinguished guests present. The club grew rapidly. Now it has 500 members. The house is charmingly furnished, is a club of art students, should be a home, and it is thronged every night. It has become the home of the American students of Paris. It is there that they keep alive their nationality. Many of the students dine in the club, sometimes for 25 cents. The subscription fee and dues for the first year amount to $6. It has been practically decided to fix the annual dues at $6. The club dues and rent pay all the current expenses except the rent.

Mr. Anderson thinks that the Government of this country should look after the rent of the club, which amounts to $1,200 a year, in order to make the club a national home. The French Government says:

"When you come to analyze it carefully, you will find that most of the outcry in France against the McKinley tariff should really be directed against the administrative bill.

IN THE REICHSTAG.

The Budget debate in the Reichstag to-day was lively. After Herr Buhl had spoken in defense of the policy pursued by Prince Bismarck as Chancellor, and against the course adopted by Von Caprivi, Herr Bebel, the socialist leader, criticized the rapid increase of the imperial debt, and of the army and navy appropriations. He contended that it was inevitable in the event of war that a number of the German States should become bankrupt. Expressions had recently been used which conveyed to the soldiers the idea that they might be employed not only against foreign foes, but also against an enemy within the Empire. Agitated mounds from every part of the house followed this allusion to the Emperor's utterances. Herr Bebel continually interjected with every thousand new recruits social Democracy was being more and more strongly infused into the army, as Chancellor Von Caprivi had pictured journalists as the only propagators of unrest, he held bound to say that many orators were engaged in the work of agitation and cited the speech recently delivered at Erfurt by a high personage.

At this point the Vice-President, Count Bismarck, followed the speaker, refusing to allow the Emperor's speech to be subjected to criticism.

Herr Bebel said he would leave his position in the hands of the Emperor, who well understood the work of journalism that spread a feeling of unrest through the country. Touching the Protectionist policy he said the heavy tariffs imposed by the Government, coupled with the extraordinary expenditures, had created enormous difficulties. The slight reduction in corn duties in the treaty of commerce with Austria, would not suffice to offset the heavy duties on imports, the result being an enormous increase of disease, mortality and crime. The structure of the middle class of society, Herr Bebel continued, was built in a swamp, into which it was slowly sinking, and which will make room for another and better social organization. The country had gotten rid of one enemy of social reform when Prince Bismarck was driven from power.

Herr Bebel again called Herr Bismarck to order, declaring that the expression name could not be permitted, being directed toward an absent member of the House.

Herr Bebel replied that Prince Bismarck had not taken his seat in the House, proceeded with his denunciation of the Government, which he was addressing, was following, as far as it could. Prince Bismarck's first steps while assuming the rôle of a protector of the working classes.

Chancellor Von Caprivi said the Emperor had been apprised of the efforts made by the Government for the acceleration of the lot of the working classes. The Chancellor proposed to refer to the Guelph pig as the best way to introduce in the Landtag the idea of maintaining the confidence of the fund and the leaving of the interest arising therefrom free of control of Parliament. An account is to be rendered to the Landtag of the steps taken by the Government to secure the confidence of the working classes.

Chancellor Von Caprivi said the Emperor had been apprised of the efforts made by the Government for the acceleration of the lot of the working classes.

BERLIN, Nov. 28.—Many of the newspapers to-day contain long articles on the speech delivered by Chancellor Von Caprivi in the Reichstag yesterday, during the course of which, after referring to the relations between France and Russia and Germany and Russia and the universal desire for peace, he pointed significantly to the efficiency of the German army. The Neue German Gazette, the organ of the Government, says that the Chancellor's speech will have a convincing effect upon Parliament, and that it will have a still more marked impression abroad as showing how little are justified the pessimistic sentiments which have lately been manifested.

The Gazette declared that the speech will give a powerful impulse to confidence in the general position of international affairs and will stimulate prosperity in Germany.

The Freischwartz declares that the effect of the Chancellor's words will be to dissipate any anxiety that may have been felt regarding Germany's military or economic relations. The nation, it says, will cheerfully support every step taken by the Monarch or the government which is calculated to strengthen peace.

THE FIELD FAILURE.

Every Member of the Firm Missing From His Post.

CONFLICTING REPORTS OF EDWARD M. FIELD'S CONDITION.

The Claim That He Has Been Driven Insane by His Losses—A Relative in Charge of Affairs—Sidney Dillon's Statement About the Hypothecated Bonds.

NEW YORK, Nov. 28.—Edward M. Field is to be in a mental condition bordering on violent insanity. There are many who look with doubt and suspicion on this statement, which has been freely and urgently spread abroad by his employees. His relatives say his assignee, Daniel A. Lindley's wife, who is Edward M. Field's sister, is very ill, and consequently no one has expected Mr. Lindley to be further racking his tortured mind with business affairs at the Washington building. But no explanation could be offered of the absence from duty of the other partners, J. F. Wiechers and H. C. Timmers. The numerous visitors to the firm's office found clerks in charge and they were lucky if they could talk with the clerks, who worked behind locked doors. In the absence of the responsible people, undug rumor played havoc with the reputation of the Field-Wiechers firm. The story of the hypothecation of Union Pacific collateral was invested with credibility by the action and attitude of the railway.

Edward M. Field's sister, Alice Durand, who is about ten years his senior, and is the only unmarried daughter of Cyrus W. Field, has been for a quarter of a century the victim of a mental affection, and is at present under the care of friends in New York.

Fanny Griswold Field, who is the wife of James Brunn Andrews of Paris, France, was also reported to be eccentric. But members of the Field family say that there is no reason to believe that her mind is deranged—pretty well for a weak minded man. That Edward M. Field is not insane is asserted by many of his acquaintances and by men who have met him in a business way.

"Why, I have known Field for ten years," said one yesterday. "I can't believe that he is insane."

F. B. Thurber states that a friend of his, Mr. B. Thurber, continually interjected with every thousand new recruits social Democracy was being more and more strongly infused into the army, as Chancellor Von Caprivi had pictured journalists as the only propagators of unrest, he held bound to say that many orators were engaged in the work of agitation and cited the speech recently delivered at Erfurt by a high personage.

The slight reduction in corn duties in the treaty of commerce with Austria, would not suffice to offset the heavy duties on imports, the result being an enormous increase of disease, mortality and crime. Herr Bebel continued, was built in a swamp, into which it was slowly sinking, and which will make room for another and better social organization. The country had gotten rid of one enemy of social reform when Prince Bismarck was driven from power.

Herr Bebel again called Herr Bismarck to order, declaring that the expression name could not be permitted, being directed toward an absent member of the House.

Herr Bebel replied that Prince Bismarck had not taken his seat in the House, proceeded with his denunciation of the Government, which he was addressing, was following, as far as it could. Prince Bismarck's first steps while assuming the rôle of a protector of the working classes.

Chancellor Von Caprivi said the Emperor had been apprised of the efforts made by the Government for the acceleration of the lot of the working classes.

BERLIN, Nov. 28.—Many of the newspapers to-day contain long articles on the speech delivered by Chancellor Von Caprivi in the Reichstag yesterday, during the course of which, after referring to the relations between France and Russia and Germany and Russia and the universal desire for peace, he pointed significantly to the efficiency of the German army. The Neue German Gazette, the organ of the Government, says that the Chancellor's speech will have a convincing effect upon Parliament, and that it will have a still more marked impression abroad as showing how little are justified the pessimistic sentiments which have lately been manifested.

The Gazette declared that the speech will give a powerful impulse to confidence in the general position of international affairs and will stimulate prosperity in Germany.

The Freischwartz declares that the effect of the Chancellor's words will be to dissipate any anxiety that may have been felt regarding Germany's military or economic relations. The nation, it says, will cheerfully support every step taken by the Monarch or the government which is calculated to strengthen peace.

IN THE REICHSTAG.

The Budget debate in the Reichstag to-day was lively. After Herr Buhl had spoken in defense of the policy pursued by Prince Bismarck as Chancellor, and against the course adopted by Von Caprivi, Herr Bebel, the socialist leader, criticized the rapid increase of the imperial debt, and of the army and navy appropriations. He contended that it was inevitable in the event of war that a number of the German States should become bankrupt. Expressions had recently been used which conveyed to the soldiers the idea that they might be employed not only against foreign foes, but also against an enemy within the Empire. Agitated mounds from every part of the house followed this allusion to the Emperor's utterances. Herr Bebel continually interjected with every thousand new recruits social Democracy was being more and more strongly infused into the army, as Chancellor Von Caprivi had pictured journalists as the only propagators of unrest, he held bound to say that many orators were engaged in the work of agitation and cited the speech recently delivered at Erfurt by a high personage.

At this point the Vice-President, Count Bismarck, followed the speaker, refusing to allow the Emperor's speech to be subjected to criticism.

Herr Bebel said he would leave his position in the hands of the Emperor, who well understood the work of journalism that spread a feeling of unrest through the country.

Touching the Protectionist policy he said the heavy tariffs imposed by the Government, coupled with the extraordinary expenditures, had created enormous difficulties. The slight reduction in corn duties in the treaty of commerce with Austria, would not suffice to offset the heavy duties on imports, the result being an enormous

MELBOURNE'S RIVAL.

The Rainmaking Claim of a Man in China.

CHICAGO, Nov. 28.—London's dark fog and Chicago's scorching drought have had their day, according to Louis Leichmann of No. 48 Lincoln avenue. He has an invention that can be used either to dispel the fog along rocky coasts dangerous to vessels or to create rain in an arid desert. For this purpose he has secured a patent in the United States.

It is his claim that his invention can produce rain in the driest spot on the globe, or clear the atmosphere in London on the foggiest day in half an hour, "he says; but this is not all. He claims that his invention will probably be found correct, with one exception. Mrs. Mary J. West, West, Detroit, was the mother of the two dead children, he is not dead. The woman supposed to be the mother was found to be the owner of the house cut off, and her name could not be ascertained.

LUE OF A VOICE.

Martin Williams May Become House Reading Clerk.

TALWART MISSOURI DEMOCRAT HAS GOOD BACKING.

Book Has Brought Him a Certain Purity and His Publishers Cash—Next Effort Will Make His Fortune—President Harrison Busy on His Case—Washington News.

INOTON, D. C., Nov. 28.—Early under the new Administration Hon. N. M. Bell came to the Capital and secured the appointment of Superintendent of the U. S. Post Office. Mr. Bell was a member of the Missouri Democrats and was recognized because of his great attainments in the service of St. Louis. Missouri is especially blessed, as proved by the fact that the railroad of St. Louis is now reading the House. He was appointed Republican after a competitive election, in which figured lawyers and country speakers. It is more likely that Mr. Broadwell will have to, however, to a Democrat, and the election has already provided for an emergency, in sending to the post the low, hoarse-voiced Martin Williams. The House reading clerk who could read a good book. Col. Williams. The position pays well and requires a man who not only possesses lung power and articulation, but one who technically pronounces all the technical and diplomatic names in the consular and diplomatic bill. Hams is for Hams for speaker, however, if the tide should bring in Crisp for, there might be great obstacles in the Colonel's success.

BOGIE'S BOOK.

NO MAN HAS WON A CERTAIN REPUTATION, BUT NO CASH.

INOTON, D. C., Nov. 28.—The disappearance of young Louis V. Bogie of St. Louis from the Pension Bureau was worth more to the publisher of his book, "The Story of the American Lady Informant," who was responsible for Bogie's removal, than the production itself was first given outside of Washington by her author, the author, Mr. Bogie. The immediate financial profit, but he will shortly issue a start-up, which will challenge perhaps the criticism that the first book from which he will benefit is not substantial. A leading man of the Capital, in talking with respondent, deplored the scale to which taste had drifted in its literature, and yet there was reason, said he, why it reached such an ebb. In place of the Post-office Department a page, had taken exceptions to the book, which embodied some things which might bloom of youth to the average reader.

OLD LADIES DANCED

A Strange Sight at the Daughters of Confederacy Ball.

IT SUGGESTED A NOVEL IDEA FOR THEIR FUTURE RECEPTIONS.

There Will Be Old-Fashioned Dances for Elderly People—Other Entertainments During the Past Week—Weddings Set for Early in December—What the Followers of Fashion Are Doing.

The Thanksgiving holiday and the grand ball on that evening put many in mind of a day or two. As for the ball, it was a grand success, financially, and a very brilliant and beautiful affair socially. One notable feature of it was the great number of elderly matrons present, who were there not only to look and countenance the affair by their presence, but also to take an active part in the dancing. Mrs. M. A. E. McRae, Mrs. C. C. Moore, Mrs. F. C. Thompson, set the example by dancing the first set, with all of the old-fashioned grace and courtesy for which she was noted in her day, and the other matrons were not slow to follow; so that it was no unusual thing during the evening to see mothers, and daughters, and in a few instances grand-mothers, dancing in the same set. It was predicted freely that the next year would be the time for the daughters of the Confederacy to be unique, picturesque and beautiful because of this unusual feature that would be in the meantime worked out, and it would come to be an understood fact that ladies and gentlemen, past their prematurity, would freely participate in the gaiety of this one ball, and that the old-fashioned dances, and the minuet and country dances of the Virginia reel will be conspicuous in the programs.

Mention has already been made of the Post-Dispatch of the Ladies' Choral Society, which is being organized in the West End for the study of vocal music. The formation has been about forty members, with Mrs. James True President, Mrs. John C. Chapman Vice President, and Mrs. Josee Mansfield as Secretary and Treasurer. They have secured a professor and will study grammar and music, and will have a concert meeting at the residence of Mrs. True.

Mrs. Scott of Westminster place, who has recently sold her house, is now residing in a pictureque flat on Vandeventer avenue, between Olive street and Washington avenue.

The marriage of Miss Marie Newman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Newman, on West Pine street, near Newstead avenue, which will be ready for the wedding in December.

Rev. Dr. Brooks of the Compton Avenue Presbyterian Church has purchased a handsome new home on Pine street, in the Newstead avenue, of which he will shortly take possession.

Mr. and Mrs. Ben Kimball will remain with their family in Alton this winter. Miss Florence Kimball will spend the season with her mother, Mrs. Douglass.

The wedding of twenty young ladies and gentlemen, who have been spending the Thanksgiving holidays with Mr. and Mrs. Wm. H. Thompson and Miss Julia Thompson at their summer home in Arcadia, returned home yesterday.

Miss Edna Morgan is convalescent after a slight attack of the grippe.

Miss Edna, though the grippe is still with her, is making rapid progress, and will arrive in time to attend the grand ball of this D. C. will arrive with us the day before to visit her cousin, Mrs. Douglass.

Among the many presents sent to the St. Louis Children's Hospital by the chairman of the board, the most interesting dinner was a large turkey and a barrel of apples from Mrs. Will's home.

Mr. and Mrs. George S. McGraw have been disappointed in getting possession of their new house for the Thanksgiving holidays, but may be able to find it for the Christmas holiday season.

Mrs. C. G. Copeland has been spending the month of November with Mrs. E. S. Haines, at her country home.

Miss Marie McGraw, the pretty Lexington girl, who has come to St. Louis to visit the daughters of the Confederacy, was so seriously ill that she could not attend. She will remain here until the first of December to visit friends in Nashville, Tenn., as soon as she is able to travel.

Mrs. Anna Cranston of Sedalia, Mo., has come down for a little visit of a few weeks, and has decided to remain indefinitely, and will be here for the Christmas season in the city by the advice of her physician.

Miss Ella Cranston has been spending several months in the springs, Ark., for the benefit of her health.

Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Billingsley, Mr. Garth Billingsley, and Miss Anna Cranston, who are spending this week in Hannibal, whether they went to attend the marriage of Miss Anna, or to have a quiet time, have been a frequent visitor to the city, and a great favorite in St. Louis society circles.

Mrs. Anna Cranston has come to St. Louis for the first fortnight with Mrs. Warren Bruce. She will return soon to her home in Southwest Missouri.

Misses Edith and Edith Nichols will leave in a few days to spend the holiday season with their mother, Mrs. Nichols.

Mrs. Prince of Linden, lady of the Van Dusen, has returned home after spending a month in the Eastern States.

The ladies interested in the World's Fair will have their next meeting at the Lindell Hotel, Dec. 1, when there is much important business to be transacted.

Mrs. John Cannon, who has been spending a month in the fortinash to her husband's relatives in the home town, has been fished in health by the grippe. She will probably have a visit to Lebanon Springs after the holidays.

Mr. and Mrs. James W. Sculley are receiving the congratulations of their friends upon the addition of a baby girl to their family circle, the first girl.

Mrs. Sculley has been spending the past two weeks visiting her sister, Mrs. Loveloy, at Jacksonville, Fla. She is expected to return home.

Mrs. Irvine and her daughters, Misses May and Julia Irvine, and Miss Neil Baum of Cincinnati, have come to St. Louis to visit their St. Louis friends, and have gone to the city for a visit before returning to their respective homes.

Mrs. H. B. Davis has been making a visit to her parents, Judge and Mrs. Huggins of New York.

Mrs. Davis has been spending a month with her mother in Europe.

Mrs. Seiler of Philadelphia made a little trip to the city, and her grandmother, Mrs. J. W. Andrews en route to New York.

In the delightful little opera, "The Trial by Jury," which has been given in the near future by the Dramatic Club, Miss Anna takes the leading role, and it is said by her friends, will make a great success of the play.

Miss Anna, who has spent the summer at Edgebrook, has returned to the city, and are located at No. 201 Sheridan avenue.

Is the SAVINGS DEPARTMENT of the

MISSISSIPPI VALLEY TRUST COMPANY

The Place to Deposit My Savings?

Yes—for the following reasons:

1. It is Safe. Its Capital is $1,000,000. Its Directors are prominent and successful business men of this city. Its officers are careful and conservative, and give their undivided attention to the institution.
2. It pays 4 per cent interest, compounded semi-annually.
3. Each dollar, if deposited before the third of any month, begins to draw interest from the first of that month.
4. As United States 4 per cent bonds, which are principally held by the wealthy sell at such a premium that they net the holder only about 2½ per cent interest, the wage earner is enabled through its Savings Department to get a larger interest than a person who holds United States bonds.

THE LICK TELESCOPE

James Lick's Strange Wish and What Came of It.

WHAT HAS BEEN ACCOMPLISHED ON THE TOP OF MT. HAMILTON.

The Pennsylvania Piano Maker's Crusade on Astronomy—A Selfish Miser and His Benevolence—How Celestial Motion Is Measured by the Spectroscopic.

Special Correspondence SUNDAY POST-DISPATCH.

SAN FRANCISCO, NOV. 23.—Standing on the eastern shore of San Francisco Bay and looking directly west one can see, any clear afternoon, a point of light dazzlingly brilliant or the fioot of a peak in the coast range of California, the highest in the range, named after the Rev. Laurentine Hamilton, and the point of light is the reflection from the dome of the great Lick Observatory, fifteen twenty miles distant in a direct line.

This observatory has more than met the expectations of the astronomers who helped to plan its construction. James Lick's passionate desire to have a man ascend with the greatest telescope in the world is now realized, for the achievements of this great glass every day recorded, show beyond question that he is in California, hard by the Golden Gate, is the center of interest in the astronomical world. The Lick telescope is resolving the mysteries of the heavens and exploring the tracks of the comets as no other telescope has ever done, and in the hands of its present observers promises to open a new era in astronomical science.

A STRANGE CHARACTER.

Californians who knew crabbish James Lick are more given to wonder over the point of light than a stranger. They never look at it without a mental comment and a reminiscence of the astonishment which took their breath away when it was announced that the ear old man, after a life as a scion in the body, had an interest in humanity and in ideas which he had carefully concealed beneath the rough and forbidding exterior of a hopeless old miser.

James Lick was born at Fredericksburg, Lebanon County, Pa., Aug. 25, 1796. In his early manhood he was piano and organ maker. He followed his trade at Hanover, Pa., and at Baltimore, Md., in 1824, when he went to Philadelphia. Soon after he went to Buenos Ayres where he was very successful, but in 1847 he returned to North America and settled in San Francisco, where he made large investments in real estate. He died Oct. 1, 1876, leaving an estate worth nearly $400,000.

There was nothing in his life which would lead one to suspect him of an interest in science, and he was evidently a capable, steady and hard. His eccentricity, however, stopped short of insanity, except perhaps in one instance. The Lick mill was a whin which had never been explained, and some theories have been advanced to account for it. Near San Jose he erected a mill—the most extraordinary mill ever seen on earth. The interior was finished in the costliest and most brilliant light woods, and everything about it was upon a scale magnificent and truly extraordinary. It cost $250,000, but being inaccessible and liable to damage from high water, was abandoned almost as soon as it was built. It was sold and sold afterwards for $10,000 to the Palma Memorial Society. It was burned a year later. It is said that the old fellow was disturbed at the thought of the mill as an object lesson. But a more satisfactory, at least a more romantic, explanation is that the old man, when he sold his telescope at Parsonsontown, Ireland, was the largest of its kind, as it was in the possession of the great telescope of the Royal Observatory, which should be connected with the name of James Lick.

FOUNDING OF THE OBSERVATORY.

In 1853 Mr. Lick surprised his friends and the public by announcing that he had given his entire fortune to a board of trustees for the interest to be expended for scientific and public purposes. The money was to be given to the monument to Francis J. Key, author of the "Star-Spangled Banner." He also proposed to give a large sum to the University of California, but was dissatisfied by the friends on the ground that it would outrage public opinion. Other sum was given to the University of California, but the largest, $70,000, was devoted to the project next his heart—the construction of a telescope which should be the most powerful ever made, before it was connected with any other, made together with an observatory, which should be connected with the name of James Lick.

It is known how the man came to insist upon a mountain site. The experience of observation on the mountain was then more encouraging. It is possible that the old man had known what had befallen those attempting to make a telescope, and he was drawn to his purpose by the brightness with which a faint star, which he had seen, attracted his attention. But his ideas and plans were crude and unformed. All he knew was that he wanted a telescope, the largest and most powerful telescope in the world, and it was in California.

can be used to advantage, giving sharp, well defined images, and where the most difficult double stars within the grasp of the instrument. The telescope is a mirror, the image of which rises nightly and roll back from the ocean, but which never envelop the sky. The air, which is never disturbed, is too thin to steady the air by keeping the temperature equable. The fifth and sixth broad daylight just before sunrise, Venus can be seen at any time of day with the naked eye. Mr. Lick's telescope is the best in the world. He does his stars with his inferior instrument.

The decision concerning the plans fell largely on Capt. R. S. Floyd who in 1878 visited most of the great observatories in Europe and America, and the instrument of Mount Hamilton, the highest in the range, named after the Rev. Laurentine Hamilton, and the point of light is the reflection from the dome of the great Lick Observatory, fifteen twenty miles distant in a direct line.

choirs will unite to render one of the most magnificent compositions ever produced.

The children's celebration of the Jubilee and their reception of the Archbishop will be the chief feature of the program.

The happy elements of the whole Jubilee, presenting as it will the tributes of all the young Catholics to the church in the city in a most appropriate and earnest manner.

All of the parochial schools in the city, irrespective of race, will be grouped together and the children carefully and earnestly drilled and practiced, so that they may be prepared for the occasion which may never again occur.

All of the children will be gathered together in the hall of the Exposition building at 9 o'clock in the morning on Tuesday. Each school and division will be represented by its respective school guardians and will be given a place in the hall according to a prearranged plan.

The children of the manual schools will be grouped together. Those from the English-speaking schools in another place, and the colored schools in another, will be given their chance to play in the celebration and will, if time and patience avail, do their share to make it a success.

Besides the canons and those immediately in charge of them no other persons will be invited to the hall.

The church dignitaries, including the Archbishops and the visiting prelates, will be given places of honor which will be arranged in their proper places in the programme will be taken up.

The opening will

The prelude "Te Deum" rendered on this day is one which will be in the front ranks of the great musicians and it breathes throughout the inspiration of its creator.

It is the composition of the greatest of all the greatest musicians of days and centuries past, it loses nothing by the comparison.

The composition of the greatest of the nineteenth century is a rarity—originality of conception and execution. It has been submitted to the greatest critics of the world and has received nothing but praises for the achievement of the composer, Anton Bruckner of Vienna. It is typical of the age and the "Ring" of the cathedral of the nineteenth century most vividly. It is an execution on a grand scale, a picture composed from the beginning to the triumphant end.

Speaking of this great composition a prominent critic has said:

"The Te Deum of Bruckner is the new school, and in it may be recognized many of the traits which will characterize the music of the Wagner cult. Strange dissonances there are, coming without premonition, but which may be anticipated, the most striking of which is the dissonance of the ninth, which gives birth to what follows:

"Passages having to untraced ears, which are as yet untraced, and which seemingly unmeaning sequences which follow nothing; preparations which are received with every evidence of close thought, which nevertheless end in disappointment. At one time or another all usage is violated, when a pianissimo may confidently be expected, a forte comes instead, where a climax may be anticipated, the height of which is still unknown. Here and there the expression of the composer's thought is so forced, so violent, so strained at times, that it is difficult to understand in the Freiburg organ, trying to sing, but hampered by the want of adequate expression. The organ is not able to express, but cannot; music is inadequate. He is in doubt, doubt which he is unable to solve, and the light appears."

"The solo and chorus are affected at times by the same uncertainty, but in the end the composer sends up his song of praise and rejoicing in the most impressive and triumphant strains that are uttered by human voices."

The 40 voices to carry the chorus have been for weeks in constant practice, and the soloists are perfectly prepared. After the concert the Archbishops' benediction will be followed by a song in keeping.

as long as they are united with that association, which I have always regarded as immoral in its object, the exciting of rebellion in Ireland, and a quasi military organization in this country while at peace with England, to be made ready for the event of war with that power."

Reference has been made to the Archbishop's opposition to the payment of the Cathedral debt. In all his transactions, where values were involved, with the exception of his picture, he showed the qualities of a born financier. He rarely had unbounded faith in the future of his business and his landed real estate. He built large blocks of stone and dwellings, the cost of which was to be met by the building of churches and numerous charities of the process. He was made the custodian of St. Louis. That trust was never betrayed, nor was confidence in his judgment ever lost. He was never a speculator. But he was never what he was, a man of means. His financial ability is needed than a reference to the immense properties now held by the church to a man of means.

He was a man of means. His Grace discovered in the coveted impression, His Grace's portrait, a man of means. The saint of Catholic France, Father Marin, was stigmatized at Cahokia, crossed the river and became a hermit in the forest and blessed the settlers in their hut there. In February, 1764, Pierre Lacoste, a Frenchman, established a settlement not a stone's throw from the site of St. Louis, the present town of St. Charles, Ste. Genevieve and Washington.

It was nearly one hundred years after Marquette and Joliet and their five companions had come down the Mississippi, the town of St. Louis was founded.

The ecclesiastical government of the archdiocese is composed as follows:

THE KNIFE THAT KILLED PO HANCY.

Remarkable Effect of the Transfusion of Savage Blood Into a Civilized Body.

BY FRANK R. STOCKTON.

[Written for the SUNDAY POST-DISPATCH. Copyright.]
Po Hancy was the chief of a band of Dacotah robbers, those outlaws who for years ravaged portions of British Bumrah, killing, robbing and burning, and regarding not whether the sufferers were their own people or white-skinned foreigners.

Prominent among these midnight assassins was Po Hancy, but he came to reward at last, before he was killed by two native spies, and the knife by which he died was seized from his body by me on my library table.

It had been sent to me by a missionary friend, to whom it had been brought as a trophy of the superior valor of the loyal and somewhat civilized natives over that of the outlaws of the jungles. It was a rude weapon with a heavy blade nine inches long, inclosed in a wooden sheath, and with a beautifully carved bone like wood.

On the point of the blade and on its sides were great blotches of rust, caused by the blood of Po Hancy.

This formidable weapon with its history was very interesting to me. I could sympathize with the joyful satisfaction with which the little band of missionaries had looked upon the knife as a blessed sleep-giver, an assurance that they need no longer lie awake on account of rumors of the approach of that bloodthirsty and uncontrollable heathen and his band.

More than that, it had another interest for me. It made me think of the man who had come to his death by it.

The idea struck me that Po Hancy and I were as different from each other as two human beings could possibly be. To arrange our differences in a tabulated statement would be a work of a great deal of time and very little value, but there was one dissimilarity between that particularly impressed itself upon me.

I had a good deal about this tiger-like Dacotah, crawling through the jungles for ten, fifteen or twenty miles, leaping down from the trees, and bounding over the ground, as of that of a cat, and bounding upon his victims with the strength and swiftness of an untiring panther.

How different was I—a languid, soft-fleshed, young, middle-aged lawyer, tired out by the heat of the sun, and by the dust of a walk of half a mile was weariness, and a climb to my office on the fifth floor of a lofty building.

At that time I had been somewhat attracted. He has not always, and I often, persuaded me of his experience, and I always did my best to make myself exceed him in every way that I could.

But the time that I began to think it time to

“I’m King than my partha; I said he, with fondish relish, and I was born in another, but fancier, than that of a tiger, but fancier, than that of a cat, and bounding upon his victims with the strength and swiftness of an untiring panther.”

How different was I—a languid, soft-fleshed, young, middle-aged lawyer, tired out by the heat of the sun, and by the dust of a walk of half a mile was weariness, and a climb to my office on the fifth floor of a lofty building.
